✦ Profile

Gary Letcher is a litigation partner at the Vancouver law firm of Edwards, Kenny & Bray and is head of the firm's Environmental Practice Group.

Mr. Letcher has been at the forefront of environmental law and sustainability issues in Western Canada for over 30 years. He has acted for industry, government and public interest groups on a range of resource use issues and contaminated land issues. He acted in connection with the environmental permitting of the Revelstoke Dam, as Commission Counsel to the Royal Commission into Uranium Mining in B.C. and as Commission Counsel to British Columbia's Wilderness Advisory Committee. Mr. Letcher has extensive experience in working with stakeholders to achieve resolution and played a significant role in the multi-party dispute resolution surrounding the Britannia Mine and surrounding the Squamish B.C. lands. He has litigated issues related to environmental indemnities and has also addressed indemnity issues in mediation and in arbitration.

Mr. Letcher has acted on environmental issues before all levels of Canadian courts and before many administrative tribunals including the British Columbia Environmental Appeal Board. He is a frequent speaker to industry and to the profession and is listed in PLC Which Lawyer, in The International Who's Who of Business Lawyers, and in Lexpert.
